ROWELL COMMISSION'S WORK

It will probably be no part of the duty of the Rowell Commission to make any recommenda-tion for a solution of the country's grave railway problem. That does not seem to be implied in its terms of reference. It is just as well, for one of that Commission has been outright and sustained in his opposition to the necessary economie being put into practice to relieve the taxpayer of the Dominion from the burden of deficits the nationally-owned system. In other words therefore could not have an open mind where any solution of the problem is being considered. The Rowell Commission has heard representations on the alpha and omega of what polyglo thought has to contribute to the country's financial and other troubles. If it is able to digest the mass of evidence it has heard, and is still hearing, it would be a superhuman body. The fact of the matter is that it is probably very much bemused and that whatever its rec mendations are they will be based on pre conceived ideas, for, in large measure, the rep-If there is anything in the nature of unified thought in the country, it is that the burden o taxation should be reduced, and that means, for one thing, that the problem of over-government should be solved. There is unified thought, too in a desire for a solution of the railway problem which is one of the causes of undue taxation but there are clear-cut differences of opinion as to how this should be accomplished. The Commission, if it touches upon the problem of taxation, can hardly leave the railway problem out of account. Should it treat upon it, it will be handicapped to the extent of the prejudiced viewpoint of at least one of its members.

The longer the Commission remains in session the more apparent it becomes that there are what appear to be irreconcilable viewpoints between Federal and Provincial authorities respect ing rights and responsibilities. That is a pity, if the desire in view is to establish a new and stronger Confederation. What may be taken for granted is that no action arising out of the prospective findings of the Rowell Commission will be taken during the life of the present Parliament. Those findings ultimately will be oured into the melting pot of public opinion. poured into the melting pot of public opinion. In the meantime, and perhaps for some years to come, the railway and other financial problems of the Dominion will remain unsolved chiefly owing to the policy of procrastination pursued by the Administration at Ottawa. It is waiting and hoping against hope that a return of "boom" times will remove the difficulties with which it is confronted. While it waits, the taxpayers continue to suffer.

MARKETING OF WHEAT

Since the dissolution of the Canada Wheat Board, nearly twenty years ago, there has been a demand from the Prairie Provinces for gov control of the nation's wheat crop. The wish for higher prices was the father of the idea, and the operation of the board was precedent for the action. It was argued that if the board of war years could be so successful successful in that during its operation the growers received fabulous prices-it could be operated under peace time conditions with equally satisfactory results to the farmers. Failing to attain the revival of a national board, the growers established the wheat pools with a view to controlling prices through a central selling agency. Membership in these pools was ntary, but the objective of many of their leaders was to obtain legislation eventually that would permit compulsory pooling of the wheat Various factors, unforeseen by pool proponorganization, and eventually attempts at price control through "orderly marketing" had to be abandoned. Abnormal conditions generally, operations of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and other factors were blamed for the collapse of the pools. Nevertheless, there remained a large number of supporters of the principle of na tionalization. Their claims were among those considered by Mr. Justice W. F. A. Turgeon in his investigation of grain and grain marketing. His report, recently tabled in the House of Com should effectively end agitation for compulsory marketing control.

Justice Turgeon has found that a compulsory government board is not practical, so long as there is free open marketing of wheat, with futures trading in Liverpool, London and other buying centres. Its technical position would be most delicate, and its huge holdings would be under constant observation. It would be subject to great criticism. Mr. Justice Turgeon, on the other hand, found that co-operative marketing on a voluntary basis is essentially sound and holds possibilities for the future He advocates development of producers' co-operative societies, after the pattern of the Au pools, which are voluntary organizations to which members promise to deliver 50 per cent of their wheat, with loss of membership being the penalty for failure to keep promises.

other butt of public controversy received close attention by the Commissioner when he investigated the futures trading system of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. He found that the is essential and should be continued, subject to supervision by a competent officer under the Board of Grain Commissioners. The m provides a ready market and a means of shifting the risk of price change. The specu-lator is necessary to its proper functioning, and his presence lessens the spread between producer and consumer. Imperfections arise when buyers become manipulative. Mr. Justice Tureon says: "Experience seems to show that in cle

The Daily Colonist the long run speculators, as a body, lose. This final result of the speculative loss helps to make business easier for the hedging trader, and is consequently of benefit to the producer and the consumer." This answers the frequently-heard that the wheat speculator robs the charge that the wheat speculator robs the farmer of the full fruits of his labor and forces the hungry and other consumers to pay an excessive price for bread. Instead, he is a shock absorber between the two primary parties to a transaction in wheat, ready to take the losses that neither party is prepared to face on the remote chance of making a gain by his specu-

IMMUTABLE

The light o the world has not died yet. On many a peak and minaret The sun still sparkles as of old, With flaming flashes of mellow gold.

The stars still hang within the sky, The moon's pale form still wanders by; Only man changes in these times Of harsh and unmelodious chimes.

The dew is still upon the rose In many a dreaming garden-close; The meadows shine, the aspens quiver By every softly moving river.

The birds still sing; the bees still hum Though lands know pandemonium.
Only man fails; and only he Forgets what man was meant to be.

Up on the boat-deck a young man in a pea-jacket, with a wavy gold line about the cuffs, swing over from the dynamo to the emergency battery set, brace his feet under an instrument-littered table, and send out the captain's distress call. Once it was C.Q.D. Now it is SOS. Always, it had the power to bring men up all standing; no matter where they were, or what they were doing. Then would fol-low the patient search for answers; for any reply, no matter how slim was the hope. It took nerve and courage to hold down a key then; even as it would under similar circumstances today. Men have gone mad at the task

On land it has been the same story. The lives of hundreds of human souls have hung on the clear-headed and cool reliability of a country station agent. Ticket colhe has opened his key to halt a runaway freight or to stop an express traveling top speed for a bridge-less river. From the poles and the equator, from opposite ends of the earth, the Knights of the Key have played a thrilling role in life and played it staunchly and well. Now bit by bit, they are being moved to one side by mechanical robots, whose chattering steel fingers grip endless links of perforated tape. weather reports, market quotations, time signals and half a hundred other messages are ground out now by automats with whirring wheels and meshing cogs; chunk-chunk-chunking their soulless way in blackening lines across rolling drums of of paper. It was not all tragedy or adventure for the Knights of the Key. Mostly, they will tell you, it was just plain work; but each man signed his work with his hand. He could no more send three letters on a key without being recognized than you out disclosing the identity of your voice. There was music in it, too; a rattling, lively music that swept along with a touch as sure and delicate as any that came from a stringed instrument in the hands of master. In newspaper offices sey will tell you of the big breaks that came over the clicking sound-ers; of sending three pages of the Bible to keep the wire open to a special office; of the death of kings and the birth of princes; of disaster on land or at sea. tell you of the plug-ins and relays, whereby half a dozen towns listened in on the news; of sourdoughs in the North who learned to tap four-word--minute messages up and down the ine to break the stranglehold of isolation on the human mind, of women who took over the keys when their husbands lay sick or dying. It is a colorful record; one which should not be allowed to slip unnoticed into the past. For they were men, were the Knights of the Key.

Symposium on 200-Inch Telescope Held by Astronomical Society

The possibility of learning mor about the so-called canals of Mars is but one of the many possibilities of the new 200-inch telescope now under construction for Mt. Palomar, California, according to the statements at last night's symposium or the giant mirror held under the auspices of the Victoria Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada.

Dr. Gordon Shaw, the preside was in the chair. Three scheduled speakers took part in the discussion James Smith, master of science at Esquimalt High School, who described the instrument; William Petrie, of the Astrophysical Observa-tory staff, who outlined some aspects of the work to be done with the mirror in the study of the solar system, and Miss Phoebe Riddell, who discussed its use in stellar Prefacing these talks Robert Peters gave a short talk on the planets and the lunar eclipse which is to take place tomorrow night, be-ginning at 9:44. Members were also reminded that Professor Brondt reminded that Professor Brondt would address a special meeting of the society on Thursday, May 26, and that the Summer study course would start in July.

The 200-inch mirror, said Mr. Smith, would weigh about four tons when complete. The present weight, however, was twenty tons. He des cribed the processes of grinding the great mass to the required size. It would take about two years for the refining process, the final polishing to within one millionth of an inch num surfacing was to be used in-stead of silver, having higher reflecting power and lasting longer The total weight of the sixty-foot tube and movable parts of the telescope would be about 450 tons, the whole apparatus to be supported on a thin oil film fed in under very high pressure,

CLEARER DETAILS

Clearer details of the satellites, the moon, and other bodies in the solar system would be available with the new mirror, Mr. Petrie stated, the magnification being such that it would bring the moon to within twenty-five miles. The light-gathering power was of more importance to astronomers than the magnification powers, and the new instrument would collect 150,000 times as much light as the human eye. Discussing the possibilities of the new instru-ment in stellar study, Miss Riddell collect light from nebulae a billion light years distant, and scientists estimated that about a billion and a half stars would become visible instead of the present six thousand. The discovery of new stars, however, was not an end in itself, but was important only in so far as they would contribute to the knowledge of the universe, help to solve fur-ther problems in physics and chemistry, and perhaps provide more data about the source of atomic energy.

"I'm Going Through With These With Henry's Buttonhole in Mind."

Jane Dixon Says:

PARENTS CANNOT WITH ANY DEGREE OF JUSTICE ATTEMPT TO FORCE THEIR CHILDREN INTO MARRYING CONTRARY TO THEIR HEARTS' DESIRE

Parents, you may, in all justice, advise your children in the affairs of the heart.

You may not, in any degree of justice whatsoever, attempt to them into marrying contrary to their hearts' desire. To do so place their entire future, health and happiness in jeopardy.

Try to reason with your son or your daughter, to prevent him r from making a wrong choice of a mate. Explain why you feel u do. Offer concrete proof of the justice of your estimation. Never make the mistake of issuing orders against one you believe unworthy of your child's affection.

That causes rebellion, deception, and very often shame and sorrow

Dear Jane Dixon:

I have been going with a young man for almost a year. He was very attentive to me and so kind and thoughtful during an illness I suffered. Then, suddenly, several months ago, my father forbade see him. I'm in my early twenties. Don't you think I am old enough to know my own mind?

My parents have the idea no boy is good enough for me. The ne they favor is a boy who almost broke my heart by talking of making plans for it, then leaving me without a word of

It is true that the relatives of the boy I mentioned first are not all above reproach, but neither are mine, for that matter. He has asked me to marry him. I love him and believe he loves me. He es some and takes an occsaional drink with the other boys, but never to excess; and he will stop even this if I promise to marry him since he knows how I detest it.

Father believes he knows it all, that anyone who differs with him is either dumb or deliberately cantankerous. Funny, he never can see his own mistakes, though, goodness knows, he makes plenty of them. He makes mother see his way, too. I'll admit the boy doesn't have real steady work, but that is nothing against him these days. What is your answer?-Meg.

Comment: If there is nothing against the young man except the mistakes of his relatives and his inability to secure steady employment your father's attitude is scarcely a just one. However, marriage should await the young man's ability to finance a wife and a home. Even though it be a modest one, a home should have some sort of security for its foundation. Explain to your father that you feel it is your right to choose your own friends so long as they are personally respectable and decently behaved. Do not argue the point. State a fact, calmly and firmly, then stick to it.
